THE HERALD BUREAU,

Alexandria, Va., July 14.—Former members of the Alexandria Trades Council of Alexandria say that this organization two years ago went out of business and they were surprised today to learn that an organization entitle of the council of Alexandria Trades and Labor Council" had endorsed E. B. White, of Loudoun County, Va., for Congress.

The members of the old Trades could not have progressed very far in his duties as one of the executors of the care rather than the law been manded by one of the great parties as its candidate for President.

If Mr. Sterling had chosen a business career rather than the law been manded by one of the great parties as its candidate for President.

If Mr. Sterling had chosen a business career rather than the law would undoubtedly have become associated with the ablest business forces of the United States as a constructive tors of Mr. Stillman's will. On the Congress.

The members of the old Trades could not have progressed very far in his duties as one of the executors a new one to them and evidently is formed for political purposes, the Alexandria Trades Council, as they claim, having gone out of business to have been opportunity for Mr.

Alexandria Trades Council are aware of the existence of such an organiza-tion as "The Alexandria Trades and Labor Council," it is claimed. If there intimate for many years. To Mr. Goodwin, Russell Sage entrusted the delicate professional task of drafting the Sage will. In that document

Mr. Goodwin was named as one of the executors. But he died shortly before Mr. Sage passed away. And he lived and been able to serve as executor his legal fees for that servce would have brought him a con-iderable fortune.

Both Men Alike.

That would have been acceptal to Mr. Goodwin, but neither Mr. Sterling nor Mr. Stillman would for a moment have considered as of any mportance such remuneration as each would have been entitled to receive had he been able to serve as exec otor or trustee.

When the subject could be discus

ed with dignity and propriety after the death last winter of Mr. Still-man, it seemed to center upon the possible if not probable choice of Mr. Sterling as the successor of Mr. Stillman as the executive leader of the National City Bank, for it was a matter of common knowledge that much of the brilliant organization achievements of Mr. Stillman after he became president of this bank re flected both personal and professions aid which he received from Mr. Sterling. Both were very able men and in many of their intellectual and in many of their intellectual and some of their temperamental quali-ties were alike, and their intimacy was profound and sincere, But it was to be otherwise, pos-sibly because it was considered more appropriate that Mr. Stillman's son should be named for this important post; possibly because were the sug-gestion made to Mr. Sterling he would have replied that he had reached the time of life when men do not wisely accept new and important re-sponsibilities. The very able lawyers whose professional services were of inestimable importance, beginning as they did at the dawn of the new era after the close of the civil war, have almost all passed away within a few years. There was Johnson, of Philadelphia, whose name stood among the list of whose name stood among the list of pre-eminent lawyers and whose services were of far greater consequences than the public knew; there was Cadwalader, who, like Mr. Sterling was of enviable professional reputawas of enviable professional reputation, and, furthermore, as was the case with Mr. Sterling, little known who some have thought possessed the profoundest intellect of any of the partners of the law firm of which William M. Everts was the head.

There was Choate who used to be ranked among the most brilliant of American advocates. There was James C. Carter, who was frequently referred to as the leader of the Amerireferred to as the leader of the American bar, and others who gained pro-fessional fame which matched that secured by the great lawyers of earlier times, even by Rufus Choate, or Charles O'Conor or Samuel J. Tilden. These lawyers had much to do with those readjustments of American business and industrial life which were necessary after the nation was phone, the fast mail and other instru

DEAD LATELY did not often visit these. He took some interest in he stood in the backgroun in his duties as one of the executors of Mr. Stillman's will. On the other hand Mr. Stillman died shortly before James Gordon Bennett passed away and there appears not to have been opportunity for Mr. Bennett to name another as one of the more important corporations. He was a master mind in the work of the trustees under the Bennett will.

It sometimes happens so. Russell Sage was inspired by personal affection, and by a high estimate, of the abilities of Almon Goodwin, for the relation between the lawyer and the eccentric man of large capital was intimate for many years. To Mr. Goodwin, Russell Sage entrusted the delicate professional task of draft-cratic party for President.

Master of English

The late James C. Carter, one of the ablest legal intellects of his time and a master of English prose, was accustomed to speak of the prose style of Governor Tilden as worthy of all of Governor Tilden as worthy of all consideration by students of the Ensilish tongue, saying that it lacked but one thing to make it perfect, and that was warmth. Tilden's style has been compared with that of Goldwin Smithyclear as crystal, faultless in construction, but as cold as ice.

Mr. Sterling, had he chosen, could have gained recognition as a master of the English tongue who in addition to clarity, conciseness and accuracy of expression would have been able to infuse also warmth and color into all the wrote, for these qualities were
